

Stillbirth in the Media October 2011

The Stillbirth Foundation Australia is excited to share with you some of the latest media exposure around stillbirth, its cause and its impact on families. Publicity like this continues to raise the awareness of the need for more research and the depth of the personal experiences surrounding stillbirth. Whether it is sharing medical findings from research or personal experiences publicly, it helps the Stillbirth Foundation Australia achieve our goal of reducing the numbers of unexplained deaths.

Please share this newsletter with friends, family and work colleagues to raise awareness of the need for ongoing funds to support our vital research. Tax deductible donations can be made via our website.

Sydney Morning Herald “Mystery behind parents’ heartbreak”

Thursday 27th October 2011 page 27 Health & Science

A timely article that delicately combines the personal impact of stillbirth whilst highlighting both the burden of stillbirth and presenting valuable results of some of the international research funded by the Stillbirth Foundation Australia. To view story online click here.

Anne Geddes “My Pregnancy – A Woman’s Story”

Saturday 29th October at 4.30pm on 7TWO, repeated Monday 31st October at 2pm

Anne Geddes photographed Rachel (pictured left) when she was 39 weeks pregnancy, and tragically, 3 days later Rachel’s baby Sierra Willow died in utero. In this episode, Rachel bravely and eloquently describes the experience of stillbirth.

Anne Geddes has written a message to all members of the Stillbirth Foundation Australia and it can be viewed at this link.

ABC Australian Story “Something About Me”

Monday 31st October 2011 at 8pm ABC1

As the first female Premier for NSW, Kristina Keneally's dramatic and controversial rise through the ranks of the Labor Party has been well documented. Kristina is also the Patron of the Stillbirth Foundation Australia, and this ABC story goes beyond an expose of her political life. Kristina talks about the death of her daughter, Caroline, and the impact this had on her, her family and her future. Some of the footage was filmed at the Foundation’s recent Alice in Wonderland Ball! To watch a preview of the story, with a voice over by Emma McLeod OAM of the Stillbirth Foundation Australia, follow this link to the ABC Australian Story website.